Dear Reader:

Massachusetts continues to face a severe shortage of affordable housing—one which affects families, single people, and the elderly throughout the Commonwealth. It's not a problem we alone face. The national economic situation, with general inflation, large deficits, and high interest rates, has worsened the picture for housing in all areas of the country. Cutbacks in federal programs have also affected the availability of housing for many of our citizens.

Massachusetts is a national leader among all the states in providing decent, affordable, and safe housing for its people. No state comes near our record of providing housing resources for those in need. I am very proud of the record we've established, and am working to improve the situation, to do even more for those of you that need housing.

Despite our efforts, demand for housing remains at an all-time high, and those in need exceed the supply. Many of our citizens continue to be unable to locate adequate, affordable housing. In 1983, I signed into law a Comprehensive Housing Act, which will help provide about 5,000 additional units of new housing for families, the elderly, and the handicapped.

In a time of such great need, it has never been more important that there be open and fair access to our housing programs. Therefore, I have asked Secretary Amy Anthony, of the Executive Office of Communities and Development, which is responsible for our state housing programs, to prepare this booklet. It can help you understand what assistance is available and whether you, or someone you know, is eligible for this assistance. Most importantly, it can put you in touch with the many resources we have in this state to find decent housing.

If you need housing assistance, or are trying to help someone who does, please read this booklet carefully. I hope it will be useful to you.

Sincerely,

Credits

This Handbook was produced in April 1984 by the Division of Housing within the Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD), Joseph L. Flatley, Assistant Secretary, in conjunction with Stockard and Engler, Inc. of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Within the Office of Communities and Development, Carol Ford researched and prepared the initial draft of the Handbook. Bob Engler, of Stockard and Engler, is responsible for the final version of the Handbook. Among the many people who lent their time to this effort are: Nancy Kaufman and Bill Bartin of the Governor's Office of Human Resources, Nancy Dasaro, Sandi Henriquez, Jim Fitzpatrick, Debbie DeWitt, Bernie Stewart, Delores Johnson, Bob Pyne, Hollis Young, Langley Keyes and Jim Ball of the Office of Communities and Development.

David Kelley was responsible for the layout, design, and production.

If you or your organization would like additional copies of this guide, please let us know.

The housing “system” in Massachusetts is made up of many parts and many people at all levels of government and in the private sector as well. Unfortunately, there is no “one-stop-shopping” location to find all the answers to everyone’s questions about housing.

There are a multitude of laws, rules and regulations which guide and control this housing “system”; no one person has all this information easily available, and no one booklet could easily condense everything into a readable format. The purpose of this handbook is to provide enough basic information to answer the following questions:

- what housing is available for lower income residents?
- where is it located?
- who is eligible for it?
- who should be contacted for more information about it?

This handbook is put together in an outline format so that you can find the section which addresses your situation as quickly as possible and then find the right person or agency to contact for specific answers to your questions. The last chapter provides information on all subsidized housing in the state, listed alphabetically by the name of the city or town as well as other resources which can provide you with the information you seek.

One final note: Because the housing system is a maze in which it is relatively easy to get confused or lost, and because there simply are not enough housing resources to accommodate everyone’s housing needs, the process of receiving the housing assistance you seek may be long and frustrating. We can only suggest that you be both patient and persistent in order to ultimately make the system work on your behalf.

We hope this handbook assists you in that process.

Permanent Housing Resources

Where Are The Housing Units* Designated For Low And Moderate Income People?

Most of the low and moderate income housing units in Massachusetts have government subsidies attached to them in one way or another. These units are available for renters within certain income limits. They can be found in new apartment complexes, rehabilitated buildings such as row houses, townhouses, garden apartments, or even converted buildings such as former schools or warehouses. Some of these developments have all of the units subsidized whereas other developments may have only a certain percentage of the units subsidized. Some are available only for elderly or handicapped households, others are not restricted in this way.

We have divided the following sections on subsidized housing developments into two groups. First, there are developments which are publicly owned, that is, they are controlled by a Housing Authority such as the Boston Housing Authority, Springfield Housing Authority, Lynn Housing Authority etc. Second, there are developments which are privately owned by numerous private housing developers around the state.

• What Is Public Housing?

Public housing is owned and managed by the 230 local housing authorities and 2 regional housing authorities in Massachusetts. Not every community in the state has a local housing authority, or is covered by a regional housing authority. Most of the larger cities and towns have created them to oversee this form of government-assisted housing. The housing authorities are public agencies, governed by laws of the state, but they are separate from local city or town government.

* A housing “unit” is a place for an individual or family to live—usually in this handbook a unit refers to an apartment, but it can also be in a room in a rooming house or a single family house.

Who is eligible for public housing?

These housing authorities operate several different programs for families, elderly and handicapped residents. If you are physically handicapped, you may also find units specially designed for you in either a family or elderly-oriented development. There are also developments which have a mixture of all types of households. If you are over 62 years old you can apply for the developments built specifically for the elderly funded by the federal government. You must be over 65 to be eligible for state-funded elderly developments. Many of the smaller authorities have only one type of housing, so you have to call to find out if they have the type of development you are seeking.

There are maximum income limits for different size families and individuals wishing to apply for public housing. These income limits are set separately by the federal and state governments for their own developments and will vary slightly. They also change over time and are different for different areas in the state, so you have to ask about these limits at the housing authority, or authorities, where you might be interested in living. For example, in 1983 for federally funded public housing in the Boston area, a single person could have an income up to $13,800 and a family of four persons could have an income up to $19,720. Larger families, of course, could have higher incomes.

Families and individuals who qualify for public housing pay a rent which is no more than 25-30% of their gross "adjusted" income.

Persons whose annual income and/or assets exceed the limits established by either the federal or state government are not eligible for public housing. Likewise, persons who have a consistently poor record of meeting their rent or utility payments, or who have a history of disturbing people or destroying property may not be housed by the local public housing authority, depending on its own tenant selection criteria.

Where can I apply for public housing?

You should contact your local or regional authority to find out where they take applications. You can fill out an application form in the office of more than one authority, depending on where you would like to live or how immediate your housing need is. First, you should call several authorities to see what might be available and how long you would be on their waiting lists. Then you should go to those authorities where you have the best chance and fill out an application. This increases your chances of being housed, even though the location of the housing may not be your first choice. At some authorities you can specify which of their developments you would like to live in. At others, you will simply be offered from one to three units once your name comes to the top of the list. If you reject all the units offered to you, your name will go to the bottom of the waiting list.

Once you have turned in your application you will be placed on the authority's waiting list in chronological order (according to the date of your application). Every housing authority has a tenant selection plan which provides priority categories to determine in what order applicants are offered housing. At the time you apply, you should be sure to inform the authority of any special circumstances you or your family may face so that you may be placed as high as possible on the waiting list. Generally speaking, the only circumstance that would give you a shortened waiting time would be an imminent threat to you or a member of your family's life or health. If you are in this situation, let the housing authority know immediately. In certain housing authorities where racial balance is a high priority category, you will be given a higher priority if you choose to be housed in a development where your race is substantially underrepresented.

Since the waiting lists vary in length in each authority, you should inquire about the approximate waiting time when you apply. It is VERY IMPORTANT to keep the authority informed about any change in address or status while you are on the waiting list, so that the authority may contact you from time to time about progress, changes in program regulations, etc. They must know how to contact you when your name reaches the top of the list. At that time, the authority will contact you in writing.

You should ask to be placed on the waiting list for every program of the authority for which you are eligible. Then you give yourself the best chance to make a choice about where you want to live when that time comes.

A list of all authorities administering the public housing program in Massachusetts is provided in this handbook. (See pages 13–24)

- What Other Types of Subsidized Housing Are There?

In addition to public housing, there are other types of subsidized housing developments. These housing complexes are owned and managed by private companies around the state. Some developments may have subsidies attached to only a certain percentage of their units, others may have all their units subsidized.

Like public housing developments, these apartment complexes can be large or small, built on one site or scattered on different sites. They serve families, the elderly and/or handicapped residents.

These various housing developments have no one particular name. They may be financed through the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency, the Farmers Home Administration (in rural areas), or through a private bank. In all cases, they have subsidies made available to them through a variety of federal or state programs. These various subsidy programs are known as Section 8, Section 236, Section 23, Section 515, Rental Supplement or Chapter 707.

Who is eligible for this housing?

There are maximum income limits according to family size, which govern these subsidy programs. These income limits vary by the type of program, and they may or may not be the same limits that apply to public housing. You may be eligible for one program but not another. In general, the income limits of these programs are very similar to public housing.

Where can I apply?

Applications are taken at the Management Office of each individual development, so you will have to contact the Management Agent directly in order to apply.

The list of subsidized developments, the number of units with subsidies, their locations, and their Management Agents' phone numbers are provided in this handbook. (See pages 25–74)

What Other Housing Assistance Programs Are Available?

There are housing payments or rental assistance programs which are not attached to specific units in specific developments. They are used by individuals or families to find their own place to live.

- What Are these Rental Assistance Programs Called?

The most widely used housing payments program is the Section 8 Existing Program. In this program, you pay no more than 30% of your income for rent, and the Section 8 subsidy pays the difference between that amount and the total rent for the apartment. The total apartment rent cannot be higher than the maximum rent set for that size apartment. The condition of the apartment must also meet basic housing standards.

The second housing payments program is funded by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) and is called the 707 Rental Assistance Program.

The 707 Rental Assistance Program is set up in a similar fashion to HUD's Section 8 Program. You pay no more than 25% of your income for rent under this Program (as compared to 30% under Section 8) and the 707 subsidy pays the difference up to the full rent. There is a separate maximum rent schedule under the 707 Program which is slightly lower than the Section 8 Program.

Who is eligible for the Section 8 program or Chapter 707 rental assistance program?

Like public housing, there are different income limits, by household size, and by different locations in the state for both the Section 8 and the 707 Programs. The Section 8 Program income limits are generally 20% higher than the income limits for the Public Housing Program; for example the maximum income in 1983 in the Boston area ranged from $17,250 for a single person household to $24,650 for a 4 person household and upwards for larger families. For some other parts of the state, the income levels will be slightly lower.

Under the 707 Program, the maximum income in 1983 in the Boston area ranged from $12,180 for a single person household and $17,400 for a family of 4. Of course, larger families can have greater incomes. Again, some other regions of the state will have slightly lower maximum income levels.

If you are given the opportunity to have a Section 8 or Chapter 707 certificate you will have sixty days to find a suitable apartment. Before you begin to look, the agency which runs the program will explain all the procedures to you.

You are protected against discriminatory practices by both federal and state laws. If you feel that you have been discriminated against, you should tell the agency assisting you right away. If the issue is still not resolved, you may contact either the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination at 617-727-3990 or the Affirmative Action Officer at EOCD at 617-727-0855.

Where can I apply?

There are basically two different types of agencies which administer these two programs, and you must apply directly to them.

Housing Authorities administer these programs as well as develop their own complexes, as we discussed earlier. There is a Housing Authority in almost every city and large town in the state as well as most of the smaller towns; in some rural areas there are regional housing authorities which cover several towns together. The full list of these authorities is provided in this handbook. (See pages 13–24)

Certain Regional Non-Profit Agencies and the State's housing office (EOCD) also administer these programs across the whole state. Currently, there are 7 regional non-profit agencies and EOCD. Their names and addresses are provided in this handbook. (See page 75)

Not every Authority or Agency provides all rental assistance programs, so you should contact those covering the area where you want to live to learn which programs they operate.

• Can Welfare Help With My Housing Costs?

The Massachusetts Department of Public Welfare operates programs which include funds for household expenses within the monthly grant which is provided. You don't have to give up these payments or have them reduced if you receive Section 8 or 707 rental assistance.

There are two basic welfare programs which cover some housing expenses. The General Relief Program provides a monthly grant which varies depending on whether you are sharing an apartment, living alone, living in a nursing home, or in a temporary shelter.

The Aid-to-Families-with-Dependent-Children Program provides benefits which are calculated based on the number of persons in your household. Rental expenses must be covered from the payment you receive unless rental subsidies are received from another program.

Who is eligible for welfare payments?

Under the General Relief Program, a person has to be “unemployable”; if you are a single person over 45 years old, aren’t working and can’t find a job, you can qualify. If you are under 45, you probably will need a medical reason for being unable to work. Most people on General Relief are single person households, although two person households can qualify if they have no work history. You must check with your local welfare office to determine your eligibility.

Under the Aid-to-Families-with-Dependent-Children (AFDC) Program there is an income and asset limit for the family as well as evidence of either absence, death or incapacity of one of the adult members of the household. As of the beginning of 1984, for example, a four person household could not earn more than $735 per month to be initially eligible for the AFDC Program. Obviously there have to be children in your household to qualify. Check your local welfare office for more details about eligibility requirements.

Where can I apply for welfare payments?

There are over 60 offices around the state; the larger offices are called Community Service Area Offices and the smaller offices are called Welfare Service Offices. Either type will assist you, and a list of all such offices is provided in this handbook. (See pages 76–78)

What Can I Find In The Private Market?

The private rental market in Massachusetts offers a very wide range of choices across the state. The same size apartment in the same condition will have a different rent depending on the community, the neighborhood, and even the street on which it is located. The rent also depends on what the landlord wants to charge, and, in some communities, is allowed to charge.

There are hard choices which have to be made by lower income households, given the range of situations available to them. Trade-offs have to be made between the rent, the size and condition of the apartment, and the area in which it is located. The harder and longer you look, the better chance you will have of improving your housing situation.

Because housing subsidies are so limited, it is advisable to continue your search even if you are on a waiting list for subsidized housing.

- How Do I Find a Suitable Apartment in the Private Market?

There is no single place to look for a suitable apartment. Obviously, low rent apartments in good condition are rarely empty for long and do not need to be advertised in the local newspapers in order to attract potential tenants. Most of these apartments get rented by word-of-mouth. Therefore, you should ask others, wherever you go, where to look and who else to ask about such housing.

There is usually a neighborhood “network” of people and locations to learn about. For example, bulletin boards often provide rental information and they can be found at laundromats, supermarkets, churches, multi-service centers, senior citizen centers, etc. In short, the more people you talk to about places to look or people to call, the better your chances are for being “at the right place at the right time” when an apartment becomes available.

- What Agencies or Organizations Can Assist Me in Looking?

A centralized place to start in any city or town is the City Hall or Town Hall. In very small communities you may only have the town clerk or Selectmen’s Office to contact for information. In larger communities, there may be a specific Housing Office which can provide you with some help. This first call can lead you to the names of persons or agencies you need to contact directly. Many communities have various departments to help, such as a Human Service Department or a Council on Aging, or even a Fair Housing Officer. You should ask for these departments by name when you call the main telephone number in the city or town. Otherwise, you should simply ask for the person who handles housing needs in the community.

In addition to local government offices, there are a number of community-based or neighborhood-based organizations which can provide assistance. A listing of the more extensive ones is provided in this handbook, as follows:

Neighborhood Housing Service Agencies	(Page 79)
Community Development Corporations	(Pages 80-82)
Community Action Agencies	(Pages 83-84)

The following list offers further suggestions of types of places to contact:

- churches
- multi-service agencies
- ethnic or religious organizations
- charitable organizations
- local mental health centers
- legal service centers
- women's groups
- human rights organizations

If you are elderly, you can call the Statewide Elderly Hotline at 1-800-882-2003 for more information; you can call any of the Area Agencies on Aging (see pages 85-86); or you can call the Housing Analyst in the Massachusetts Department of Elder Affairs at 617-727-4092 to learn more about the various housing options for the elderly.

If you are physically handicapped, you can call the Statewide Information Center at 617-727-5540 for more information, or you could contact one of the independent living complexes for physically handicapped residents around the state. (See page 87)

If you are mentally ill, or mentally retarded, you can call the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health to obtain more information about housing resources. For mental health services, you can call 617-727-9827 or 617-727-9842; for mental retardation services you can call 617-727-5608.

There are also certain real estate offices which provide information on apartment rentals; if you contact a real estate office in your community which doesn't handle rentals, you might ask them which office to call.

Temporary Housing Resources

If I'm In Need Of Temporary Housing Who Do I Call?

There are a variety of service agencies around the state which can provide you with information about temporary shelters, according to your specific needs. Your first call should be to your local welfare office. (See pages 76-78). The Department of Public Welfare can place you in one of their temporary shelters, or they can subsidize your cost for a temporary lodging under their Emergency Assistance Program if you are eligible for welfare assistance. Under this program they will also pay up to four month's back rent if you have received a "notice to quit" in writing and are about to be evicted. Contact your local office for details.

There are other agencies which also can provide you with appropriate information, such as:

- Community Action Agencies (See pages 83-84)
- Salvation Army (See pages 88-94)
- Red Cross (See pages 88-94)
- YMCA/YWCA (See pages 88-94)
- "Information and Referral" Agencies (See pages 88-94)

According to A Guide to Sheltering the Homeless put out by the Governor's Office of Human Resources, any referral agency should be able to answer the following questions before making a specific referral to a shelter. You might ask the agency some of these questions yourself.

- Do people have to line up to get in?
- What time does it open?
- Will beds be assigned?
- Does the shelter have eligibility criteria?
- Does the shelter require a referral?
- Does the shelter turn people away?
(Do you have a contingency plan?)
- Is a fee charged?
- Is food provided?
- Is there a day program?
- Is there a place to store possessions?
- Does the shelter provide counseling and advocacy?
- How many days or nights can someone stay?
- Can the shelter be used as a mailing address?
- Does the shelter provide other services like day care, transportation, medical care or advocacy?
- Does the shelter have linkages with other community services?

For additional information, you should call the Massachusetts Coalition for the Homeless at 617-523-6400, ext. 527.

Where Are The Temporary Shelters Located Around The State?

At the present time there are over 40 shelters around the state (with more due open in 1984) which serve either women or men exclusively, men and women together, or families. These shelters are listed in the handbook. (See pages 95-97)

We have chosen not to list additional shelters which serve battered women and their children, adolescents, or alcoholic men and women. For a listing of these shelters, you can contact the Massachusetts Coalition for the Homeless at (617) 523-6400, ext. 527 and ask for information directly, or you can ask to receive A Guide to Sheltering the Homeless, which lists all these additional resources.

A note on using the lists:

Privately owned subsidized housing developments are not designated as family, elderly, or handicapped because such designations were not available for all developments. Therefore you will need to check at each development to see who is eligible to live there.

Secondly, the management agent listed is not in every case the rental agent. The management agent will be able to refer you to whoever actually takes applications for the units.
